A Roundtable Discussion

“Water is life!” is more than a slogan. For every one of us, globally, it is a matter of life or death. We are going to focus on Chicago, at the tip of the Great Lakes Region, to address a matter of our survival globally; we are going to look at how a public resource is increasingly becoming subject to the control of corporate private property. People active in battles at the grass roots will bring their experience to the table, in order to think about next steps and solutions. If anything has a capacity to unify us it is the common requirement that water is life. At a rally commemorating the oil spill at Line 3 near Grand Rapids, MN, water protector said “with the approaching trial of Derek Chauvin, we uplift the interconnectedness of the struggle to protect treaty rights, clean waters, sacred space and Indigenous sovereignty with the right of all people to live in a world free of oppression and destruction of the earth.”
