

EDUCATION UNDER ATTACK

Education is supposed to be the great equalizer. Yet, with the lack of good-paying jobs, the promise falls short. Our public schools continue to be attacked with budget cuts. School closures across the country force students to travel long distances or through dangerous neighborhoods. At the same time, we see an increase in charter schools and vouchers that drain public school funds to support charter and private schools. In higher education, the number of full-time, tenured professors is declining, and poorly paid adjuncts are increasing. This panel will discuss the challenges education is facing. We will address what is being done to fight for the schools students deserve.
